

Need a Reliable Staff?

From: Arizona Correctional Industries webmaster@aci.az.gov

Inmate work crews often outperform civilian staff.

Dear Clark:

Consider this. How much does your recruitment cost you? How much does employee training cost? How much are you paying your staff while they are training, instead of doing the jobs they were hired to perform? How much are you paying the trainer?

I bet that adds up to quite a bit of money over the course of a year. Right?

What if you could pay your next ten hires at minimum wage? What if those same ten men or women showed up every single day? What if after they were trained, you could still pay them minimum wage and some of them were so good at the job, they could do the training of the next group you hire?

As this reduces your on-boarding costs, would it also free up managers to concentrate on growing the business instead of continuously finding ways to grow the staff?

Read how one manager has been using inmate labor to solve staffing issues for nearly 20 years, for two different companies: Mutual Trust and Respect Creates Great Partnerships.

Learn about the other Arizona companies that are helping to train inmates valuable jobs skills to use after their release, many at that same company.

Thanks for doing business with us.

Best,

ACI Sales Team
Arizona Correctional Industries

Papa John's Produce Employs two shifts of inmates each day

See what's happening on our social sites

